HISTORY AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE PARTY WHIP SYSTEM IN THE U.S. SENATE[*]

Until recently, there has been relatively little study of party leadership positions in the U.S. Congress.[1] The operation of the whip system in the House of Representatives was examined by Prof. Randall B. Ripley.[2] The whip system in the Senate, however, has been a neglected area of study. The purpose of this document is to examine (1) the historical development of the whip system in the Senate, including precedents established in the British House of Commons, (2) the functions of party whips in the Senate, (3) the relation between the whip and his party leader, and then (4) offer conclusions.

HISTORY

British

Michael Ameller has written:

> The office of whip is a purely British institution; it is found in Ceylon and Ireland and as far as one can see in all Commonwealth countries which have based their Parliament on that of the United Kingdom.[3]

The term "whip" has two distinct parliamentary meanings in England. The "whip" refers not only to party officials, like those in the U.S. Senate, but to a written document as well. A definition of what the document is and how it is employed by British party whips may avoid some confusion.

The Government and Opposition Whips send to their respective party members a weekly document called a whip. This notice (whip) informs Members of legislative activities for the next week. Members are informed about the priority or urgency of matters by a system of underlining. Each legislative matter in the whip notice is underlined according to its importance. A one-line whip indicates that no vote is likely; a two-line notice means that the business is fairly important and a vote is possible; and a three-line whip means that every Member is expected on the floor since an important debate and vote is scheduled. Norman Wilding and Philip Laundy reported that whips—underscored by as many as six lines—were used in the House of Commons as early at 1621.[4]

Whips underlined in red ink for divisions of supreme importance were introduced during the session of 1893, by Mr. Edward Majoribanks (the chief Ministerial whip, later Lord Tweedmouth), when the Home Rule bill was under protracted discussion.[5]

Whips were first used, on scholar reported in 1621 when "notices were sent to the King's friends in the House of Commons."[6] A royal whip issued on September 21, 1675 said:[7]

> Sir J. Williamson to a Member of Parliament. The King being firmly resolved that Parliament shall meet October 13, that you may not be surprised with any contrary reports, nor be detained by the business of the sessions, which is unhappily is near that time, has commanded me to give you this notice, and to desire you will not fail to be here at or before the time appointed, and I desire you will let me know as soon as you come to town, that I may acquaint the King how his commands to me have been executed.

During the 17th and much of the 18th centuries, whip notices were referred to either as "circular letters," "treasury notes," or "treasury letters." The reason: the Secretary to the Treasury in the 175 's began to assume functions comparable to modern-day party whips. As explained by Dora Clark, Treasury Secretaries were frequently named tellers to record votes, and "in that position a secretary could readily count the friends and foes of Government." In addition, he "drew up the division lists, which indicated the strength of Government and formed a record of individual votes. As the Secretary to the Treasury had at his disposal information in regard to all the Members who had received favors from the Government (such as pensions, places, contracts, or assistance in elections, either for themselves or their friends), he was advantageously situated to whip in those members when an important vote was to be taken."[8] The Secretary to the Treasury distributed such information in a "circular letter" to his friends.

Leaders of ad hoc groups in the House of Commons also sent circular letters to their friends, particularly at the start of each legislative session. For example, on October 17, 1761, Lord Sandwich received the following notice:[9]

> The Duke of Newcastle sends his compliments to my Lord Sandwich, and begs the favor of his Lordship to send to all his friends; and particularly to those here mentioned, to attend, without fail, the first day (November 3) of the Session; and to be at the general meeting at the Cockpit, the night before, Monday, November 2.

By 1763, according to L. B. Namier, "the procedure of the 'circular letter' was firmly established, and it even seems that the withholding of that 'whip' was considered a slight."[10]

Turning to the whip as party official, Edmund Burke is often considered the first to use the term to denote a party leader. As described by Robert Luce:[11]

> In May 1769 there was a great debate in the House of Commons on the petition against the return of Colonel Luttrell for Westminster in the place of Alderman Wilkes, who had been expelled from the House by its order. The King's Ministers made great efforts to bring their followers together from all quarters for this debate. Burke, who took part in the debate, referred to these efforts, and described how Ministers had sent for their friends to the north and to Paris, whipping them in, than which, he said, there could not be a better phrase.

Burke was referring to the "whipper-in," a huntsman assigned the task of keeping the hounds from straying during a fox hunt, whipping them back into line if necessary. According to Lord Bossom, a former Member of Parliament: "Since that time the Members responsible for this marshalling of the forces and for giving out information have been called whips, and occupy an important position in both the government and opposition parties."[12]

To be a successful leader in this office requires certain abilities. According to Wilding and Laundy, referred to earlier, former Prime Minister Disraeli summed this up when he said: the whip's office required "consummate knowledge of human nature, the most amiable flexibility, and complete self-control."[13]

A common expression in England about his chief function is: The whip's job is "to make a House, to keep a House, and cheer the Minister."[14] The meaning of the last phrase is self-evident, while the first two refer to the whip's job (1) to insure that sufficient Members of his party are present to constitute a quorum and (2) to guaranteee that his party can outvote the opposition in any division by keeping his Members on the floor. It is especially important for Government whips to insure that their party receive a majority vote—as large as possible—on every issue, because a "snap-vote" that is lost by the Government damages their prestige within and without the chamber. According to Prof. W. Ivor Jennings, a division lost by the majority party "creates the impression that Government supporters are not keen in their support or are failing in their parliamentary duties, and it encourages the opposition, both in the House and outside."[15] Thus, the job of the Government or chief whip is to prevent such losses while the opposition whip's task is to inflict as many defeats or narrow majorities as possible upon the majority party.

To avoid such parliamentary defeats, the chief whip and his assistants see that all party members are kept informed of current legislative business and that they are present for all important debates and votes. Each party, of course, always has a whip or whips on the floor to follow debate and to protect their party's interests. If a Member wishes to be absent, the respective party whips arrange "pairs" for these legislators.

The numerous contacts that the chief whip, his opposition counterpart, and their assistants have with their party members enable them to act as channels of communication between the party leaders and the rank-and-file membership. For example, the chief whip collects and evaluates the various policy views expressed by his party members and passes this information on to the Prime Minister. If a Member or group of Members is discontented, the Chief whip also passes this information on to his party leader. It was reported, for example, that Prime Minister Disraeli "used to be given a list of his supporters who were getting restive by his whips, and he would make a point of having a word with them in the division lobby, using his famous charm to soothe their wounded feelings."[16] All of this is part of a reciprocal process in which the whips attempt to influence the attitudes of the rank-and-file to insure party unity, and party members, in turn, attempt to influence the whips, and through them, their party leaders.

United States

From 1789 to 1913, Senate party whips did not exist, to the best of our knowledge, even though our national legislature followed many of the legislative practices of the English Parliament. It is likely that certain legislators performed tasks similar to those of contemporary whips, but the institutionalization of the office apparently did not occur until the 20th century.

A probable explanation for the lack of whips is that strong political parties evolved in the Senate only after decades of development. James Young, for example, concluded that in the period from 1800 to 1825 "parties on the Hill were largely unorganized groups. They were without an openly recorded membership, much less with differentiated leadership roles."[17] In 1874, Senator Justin Morrill (Republican, Vermont) noted this lack of party organization when he said:

> I do not propose to act as "the whip" of the Senate. I think the Senators are quite competent to express their own judgment without any whip. We have never had what is called a whip in the American Senate.[18]

As late as 1885

> Senate parties were still without coherence, exercising only limited influence.[19]

In 1913 the first Democratic party whip—J. Hamilton Lewis of Illinois—was appointed. Senator Lewis wrote: "So far as I have been able to learn, I was the first Democratic whip appointed in the history of the U.S. Senate. It was during the first Wilson Administration."[20] The New York Times gave the following account of Senator Lewis's appointment:

> As a further precaution against a snap division in the Senate by which the Democrats might find themselves in the minority, the caucus elected Senator J. Hamilton Lewis > of Illinois today to serve as "whip," although designated as assistant to Majority Leader Kern in the capacity of floor leader. Mr. Lewis's chief duty will be to see that Democrats are present or paired at every rollcall.

> The appointment of an assistant to Senator Kern, though brought about in a way to avoid wounding the majority leader's pride, is in fact partly explained by general dissatisfaction with Mr. Kern's leadership.[21]

The biographer of Majority Leader John Worth Kern (Democrat, Indiana) has written that poor attendance at some party caucuses angered Senator Kern and resulted in the appointment of a party whip:

> At times when the regular Democratic attendance had dwindled to a corporal's guard his impatience manifested itself in caucus, where on one occasion he supplemented his appeal with sarcastic protests, and a "party whip" was selected to assist him.[22]

Two factors, then, seem to have produced conditions leading to the creation of a party whip post: (1) Democratic dissatisfaction with their floor leader and (2) Senator Kern's need for an assistant to insure both attendance at party caucuses and on the Senate floor.

Having observed the Democratic innovation, the Republicans in 1915 appointed as their first party which Senator James Wadsworth of New York, who served but 1 week until Senator Charles Curtis of Kansas was named as his successor.[23]

Like other party leadership positions, that of party whip is not provided for in the standing rules of the Senate, though beginning in 1955 the Legislative Branch Appropriations bill contained funds for two clerical assistants, one for the majority whip and one for the minority whip.[24] Whips are chosen in the secret caucus, or conference, of each party at the beginning of each new Congress.

Prior to 1944, the historical data reveal few changes in the office of the Senate whip. On February 18, 1944, Senate Republicans formalized, for the first time, their conference rules. These rules provided for the election of an assistant floor leader (whip) and other party officers.[25]

Since 1944 the role of the party whip has evolved or expanded in at least four ways.

First, a Senate-approved provision of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 recommended that the majority and minority parties establish policy committees at the beginning of each new Congress. These party policy committees were "to plan the legislative program, coordinate and guide committee activity, focus party leadership and strengthen party responsibility and accountability." [26] This provision was deleted by the House but subsequently the majority and minority parties of the Senate did establish policy committees by statute. These policy units have varied in importance over the years, but for our purpose it is important to note that the whips of each party sit ex officio on them. As Senator Alben Barkley (Democrat, Kentucky) reported:

It is interesting to note that on Jan. 6, 1960, Senate Republicans adopted in conference a resolution which provided that the seat next to the floor leader shall be occupied by the whip, and "should he cease to be Whip he shall be assigned a seat in accordance with his seniority rights." Personal interview, Mr. Mark Trice, Secretary to the Senate Republicans, July 24, 1972, Washington, D.C. This practice became formalized for Democrats at the start of the 85th Congress (1957). See Congressional Directory, 1913–1972.

> In a sense the same situation as that referred to by the Senator from Maine with respect to two members of the majority steering committee arose regarding the minority whip of the Senate and the secretary of the minority conference. It was felt that, in view of the position held by the Senator from Illinois as the whip and the position held by the Senator from Connecticut, that they would not be assigned to the policy committee but they will be invited, as all other members of the minority of course will be invited, and will be free to advise it whenever it is necessary and desirable without power to vote.[27]

The Republicans did the following in 1946:

> The conference decided to make the Steering Committee into a real policy-making body, through which legislative recommendations would begin clearing tomorrow. On this committee the conference put Senators Taft, C. Wayland Brooks, Albert Hawkes, Homer Ferguson, Guy Gordon, and Leverett Saltonstall. Ex-officio members, in light of their key posts, will be Senators White as majority leader, Millikin as conference chairman, and Wherry as whip.[28]

The Policy Committees often assume a greater importance when a party does not control the Presidency or has majority control of the Senate. According to former Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Democrat, Montana), beginning in 1967 the Democratic Policy Committee gradually became an important party instrumentality.[29] After Republican President Richard M. Nixon's ascendancy to the White House, the Democratic Policy Committee became especially active in the development of public and party policies.[30] Senator Mansfield announced on May 20, 1969, for example, that the Policy Committee would formulate Democratic positions in areas where there existed a substantial degree of unity among the members of the party.[31] The then Majority Whip Robert C. Byrd suggested reasons why the Policy Committee exercised a stronger role at that time than it did before: first, Senator Mike Mansfield (Democrat, Montana) preferred to use the Policy Committee more than did his predecessor as Majority Leader, Lyndon Johnson, and second, with Republican Nixon in the White House, Senate Democrats assumed a greater responsibility for initiating and developing a legislative program.[32] In 1977, even with a Democratic President, the Policy Committee, under the chairmanship of Majority Leader

Byrd, augmented its staff to enhance its analytical and coordinative capabilities.

On the other hand, the staff of the Senate Republican Policy Committee used to issue, usually on a weekly basis, what it called "Republican Memos," regardless of which party controlled the White House. Those reports contained a disclaimer to the effect that the papers were a staff product and did not necessarily represent the views of any Republican Senator. Distributed to approximately 1,500 individuals, the memos discussed not only legislation before the Senate but other significant issues as well.[33] With Democrat Carter in the White House, the GOP Policy Committee, under Chairman John Tower of Texas, reorganized its staff and mission. A principal focus of the restructured group is to develop policy alternatives and initiatives to those proposed by the Democratic Administration and Senate. For example, on February 11, 1977, Minority Leader Howard Baker (Tennessee) introduced "an alternative to the (Carter) administration's economic plan." The GOP Policy Committee coordinated the formulation of the economic legislation. The Policy Committee also monitors the legislative work of committees and keeps track of proposed floor amendments to measures.

His close knowledge about the working of the Senate—the legislative agenda (including the President's program), committee activity, power relations in the Senate, a feel for the opinions of Senators on particular policies—is an important element of the whip's influence. And the Policy Committee of each party, "through its regular meetings, through the investigations of its staff, and through its discussion of the Senate agenda, is an institutionalized communications center" for providing a whip with at least some of this information.[34] This is significant for, as Prof. Nelson Polsby has written, leadership is "centrality in a communications network."[35]

A second development in the whip's office occurred in January 1966: the Senate Democratic Conference appointed as assistant whips the four members of its Legislative Review Committee, i.e., legislators who act as official objectors when the Consent Calendar is called.[36] This was not, however, the first time that the Democrats had had assistant whips. During the 76th Congress, Sherman Minton (Democrat, Indiana) served as deputy whip to J. Hamilton Lewis (Democrat, Illinois)[37] while in 1937 Joseph Robinson (Democrat, Arkansas), the majority leader, was authorized by the party conference to appoint an assistant whip.[38]

In 1966 Senator Russell Long (Democrat, Louisania), then majority whip, described the duties of the newly appointed assistant whips:

> Those Senators were filling positions created by Lyndon Johnson when he was majority leader in the Senate; namely the so-called Calendar Committee, to sit in the majority leader's chair and help get on with the program of the Senate.

> Those Senators have been fulfilling that position, doing their jobs and acting in our absence whenever we could not be available to fill the leader's chair, because sometimes we are in conference committees, trying to make the will of the Senate prevail over the House, and sometimes we are necessarily absent from the Chamber, seeing our constituents, or carrying out our duties elsewhere.[39]

Called "deputy whips" today by Democrats, they include for the 96th Congress Senators John Durkin (New Hampshire), Wendell Ford (Kentucky), John Glenn (Ohio), Walter Huddleston (Kentucky), Patrick Leahy (Vermont), Donald Riegle (Michigan), Paul Sarbanes (Maryland), Donald Stewart (Alabama), and Spark Matsunaga (Hawaii).

A third change in the whip's position occurred in the Republican party: a change in title. On October 7, 1969, "the Republican conference met and unanimously adopted a motion to change in the conference rules the title of 'whip' to that of 'assistant [Republican] leader.'"[40] Senator Mansfield changed Senator Edward Kennedy's (Democrat, Massachusetts) title as well, for a 1970 Congressional Directory identified him as the "assistant majority leader."[41] In 1971, however, with the election of Robert Byrd (West Virginia) as whip, the Democrats returned to the title of majority whip. This was done at Senator Byrd's request, who preferred that title because of its parliamentary and congressional history.[42]

With the election in 1969 of Senator Hugh Scott (Pennsylvania) as Republican leader and Senator Robert Griffin (Michigan) as assistant leader, the role of the whip on the Republican side was greatly expanded. Senator Griffin brought to the position a keen interest in improving communications among Republican Senators. He saw to it that "Whip Notices" were prepared and distributed to Republicans on a regular basis. This was started with the beginning of the 1970 session, and provided Members with a concise description of the legislative program for the week ahead.[43] In the English way, underlining was used to indicate, as nearly as possible, when votes were expected on the floor of the Senate (below is a copy of a 1979 Republican whip notice).

It is possible that the Senate might consider S. 756, authorizing appropriations for the Office of Federal Procurement Policy, assuming action on S. 241 is completed.

Rollcall votes expected.

TUESDAY, MAY 22

Time for convening uncertain.

The majority leader has unanimous consent to call up S. 584, the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and the Arms Export Control Act, and it is expected that he will do so.

Rollcall votes expected.

It is also anticipated that, at sometime during the week, the conference report on the First Concurrent Budget Resolution will be available for action.

The program for the balance of the week has not yet been determined. Please contact 4–8601 for details on the daily schedule. My office at 4–2708 is available to answer questions.

NOTE: The Memorial Day recess will begin when the Senate has concluded its legislative business for the week. The Senate will then reconvene on Monday, June 4th.

Another change occurred in 1970 when the Republicans named six regional whips: Edward W. Brooke (Massachusetts), Edward J. Gurney (Florida), Charles H. Percy (Illinois), Jack Miller (Iowa), Clifford P. Hansen (Wyoming) and Mark O. Hatfield (Oregon). The creation of regional whips developed from a meeting between Minority Leader Hugh Scott and Minority Whip Robert Griffin.[45] Their purpose was to help implement Senator Scott's conception of "shared leadership," i.e., that a collective entity rather than an individual should guide Republican party fortunes in the Senate. Additionally, the creation of regional whips helped to insure that a party leader was always on the Senate floor; it broadened the base of leadership within the party; it improved the ability of the leadership to predict who will vote for or against the party on key issues; and it enabled the party to protect its interests by always having a whip on the floor to respond to attacks by the opposition. In fact, a prime duty of the minority whip was to insure that, in his absence, a regional whip was always on the floor of the Senate.[46] A related practice that predates the regional whip system, it should be noted, was that employed by Republican whip Thomas Kuchel (California). With the approval of Minority Leader Everett Dirksen (Illinois), Senator Kuchel used freshman members of his party to assist him in his duties as party whip.[47]

The election of new Democratic (Alan Cranston of California) and Republican (Ted Stevens of Alaska) whips in 1977 produced several other noteworthy changes. Minority Whip Stevens replaced the regional GOP whip system with a new assistant whip structure to "make certain that the rights of [GOP] members * * * are protected during Senate floor action."[48] In a novel departure, along with several of their more experienced colleagues, all first-year GOP Senators are afforded the opportunity to become assistant whips. Each assistant whip covers the floor on a rotating basis for about 2 hours.[49]

[45] At the beginning of the 92d Cong. (1971), the number of regional whips was decreased from six to five with only one holdover—Senator Edward Gurney. With the exception of Senator Gurney, all five previous regional whips were up for re-election in 1972. In 1972 the regional whips and the states they were responsible for were: Charles Mathias—Maryland, Delaware, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Maine; William Saxbe—Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Michigan, Illinois, and New York; Edward Gurney—Florida, Texas, Kentucky, Tennessee, and South Carolina; Henry Bellmon—Oklahoma, Nebraska, Wyoming, Kansas, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Iowa; Robert Packwood—Oregon, Alaska, Hawaii, Idaho, Colorado, Utah and Arizona.

[46] Personal interview, Mr. Cecil Holland, administrative assistant, Senator Robert Griffin, Washington, D.C., April 1972.

In another departure, Minority Whip Stevens introduced the practice of "double teaming" the floor. A GOP whip will always be present to assist the party's floor manager during Senate debate on legislation. As a result, the GOP floor manager can concentrate on substantive concerns, and the party whip on procedural issues that might arise during floor debate.

The selection of first-year Republicans as assistant whips is designed in part to facilitate their mastery of Senate floor procedures. The assistant Republican whips for the 96th Congress are:

William Armstrong (Colorado)
Rudy Boschwitz (Minnesota)
John Chafee (Rhode Island)
John Danforth (Missouri)
Thad Cochran (Mississippi)
William S. Cohen (Maine)
Orrin Hatch (Utah)
Gordon J. Humphrey (New Hampshire)
Larry Pressler (South Dakota)
Jesse Helms (North Carolina)
John Warner (Virginia)
Richard Lugar (Indiana)
James McClure (Idaho)
Harrison Schmitt (New Mexico)
Malcolm Wallop (Wyoming)
David Durenberger (Minnesota)

In addition to the assistant whip concept, Senator Stevens introduced other innovations as assistant minority leader. First, he arranged briefings by the Senate Parliamentarian for newly elected Republicans on floor procedures. Second, Senator Stevens instituted biweekly press briefings to better insure that the spectrum of GOP views on public issues is made known to the press and media. Third, the assistant minority leader prepared an inventory of the policy experts on the personal staffs of GOP Senators. With the White House controlled by the opposition party, Senator Stevens believes it important for his party colleagues to have their own in-house "information bank." Fourth, the minority whip has volunteered his Capitol office to colleagues for meetings with members, staff, or public officials. Fifth, Senator Stevens has promoted party cohesiveness by sponsoring meetings of Republican Senators with contrasting policy viewpoints. Sixth, the assistant minority leader has designated a member of his staff to act as a liaison with House Republicans. Seventh, to promote greater accuracy about the voting intentions of his colleagues, Senator Stevens has conducted "whip counts" that are closely synchronized with floor decisionmaking. Finally, Senator Stevens has directed his aides to encourage greater interaction among Republican staff on the floor, so

GOP Senators will be kept better informed and their interests protected.[50]

While the Democratic whip system in 1979 remains essentially as before, Majority Whip Alan Cranston has introduced meaningful changes. For example, with the concurrence of the majority leader, Senator Cranston has increased the number of Democrats appointed as deputy whips (nine in 1979 as compared to four in 1975). The increase will strengthen the majority leadership's capacity to process the Senate's workload and to monitor sentiment for and against legislation.

As another example, Majority Whip Cranston is very concerned about improving the timely transfer of legislative information to Senators, and in reducing both meeting conflicts among committees and between committees and the floor. To help accomplish these goals, Senator Cranston has developed the computerization of whip notices. Every Friday, Majority Whip Cranston prepares his weekly whip notice, which identifies the measures the majority leader has scheduled for consideration the following week. The whip notices can be "called up" by computer terminals located in senatorial offices. Changes in the floor schedule can be quickly transmitted on-line to every Senator.[51]

Finally, in a somewhat unique departure as party whip, Senator Cranston believes a major part of his job is "to pitch in on a bill that I'm deeply concerned about and seek to move it along." [52] Armed with his rollcall tally sheet, Majority Whip Cranston helps to mobilize support behind issues he favors.

There have been 15 Democratic whips since 1913 (for a complete listing of Democratic and Republican whips see table 1, below).

In Prof. Arthur Macmahon's analysis of the 1st session of the 71st Congress, Senator Key Pittman of Nevada is listed as whip for the Democrats (see 24 "American Political Science Review" 40, February 1930). Prof. Fred Israel, author of "Nevada's Key Pittman", (1963), stated in a telephone conversation that he could not substantiate that Senator Pittman was ever a party whip. Additionally, this writer examined the Key Pittman Papers (1898 to 1951) in the Manuscript Division of the Library of Congress and found no evidence that Senator Pittman had been a party whip.

Senator J. Hamilton Lewis (Illinois) served the longest—12 years. Democratic whips have served an average of 4.6 years before either advancing to another party office, resigning, losing to another contender for the position, or suffering defeat at the polls. The average age of these men at the time of their election to the post was 50.4 years. In a body noted for its adherence to the custom of seniority, nine first-term Senators were elected to the office of party whip.

Of the 12 Republican whips since 1915, Senator Thomas Kuchel of California served the longest—10 years—before his primary defeat in 1968. Republican whips served an average of 5.9 years in the Senate before assuming that post and an average of 5.4 years in the position. The average age of Republicans when elected to the whip post was 54.9 years. The data indicate that there are very few recruitment differences in age or length of service between Democratic and Republican party whips.[53]

A man is elected whip for many reasons: (1) He bridges ideological polarities in his party; (2) he can mediate and negotiate effectively; and (3) he has learned the arts of parliamentary procedure. Longevity of legislative service, however, is not a prime qualification for election. As Prof. Donald R. Matthews concluded:

[53] No Republican whips were appointed from 1935 to 1944 since only 17 Republicans were in the Senate following the landslide election of President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1936. Accordingly, the minutes of the Republican Conference for this period state: "On motion of Senator Hastings, duly seconded and carried, it was agreed that no Assistant Leader or Whip be elected but that the chairman be authorized to appoint Senators from time to time to assist him in taking charge of the interests of the minority." A note attached to the conference minutes added: "The chairman of the conference, Senator McNary, apparently appointed Senator Austin of Vermont as assistant leader in 1943 and 1944, until the conference adopted Rules of Organization." Letter from Mark Trice to Lewis Williams, Oct. 2, 1950, supra.

> The leader's job requires vast energy, tolerance, patience, a willingness to pay infinite attention to details, manipulative ability, a sense of 'news,' and a talent for creative compromise, but the exact mixture of these skills needed for effective leadership varies from one situation to another.[54]

A knowledge of human nature, amiability, service, tact, and complete self-control, Prof. Marvin Stromer observed, were the essential qualities a whip must have.[55] And Senator Leverett Saltonstall (Republican, Massachusetts) observed that a party whip must like people and get along with them if he is to do an effective job.[56] In addition, Senator Griffin has stated that a whip must be willing to (1) serve long hours on the floor and (2) respond quickly to requests for information from his Republican colleagues, either personally or through an assistant on the Senate floor.[57]

As table 1 reveals eight of the 25 Senate whips were elevated to the office of majority or minority leader from the assistant floor leader's position. The importance of the whip's office as a stepping-stone to the party leadership is a recent development in both parties and perceived by Senators to be important in this regard. Senator Russel Long (Democrat, Louisiana), for example, pointed out:

> When I ran for the position of majority whip, I had very much in mind the fact that men I had known like Lyndon Johnson and Mike Mansfield had served as whip before becoming the majority leader. It's the logical stepping-stone in that direction.[58]
> Because of the increased visibility of the whip's role within his own party and the opportunity it affords the incumbent to establish good relations with his colleagues, that office has become an important step on the pathway to the party leadership.

Seven of the eight whips who became either majority or minority leader did so in the period from 1949 to 1977. Only Charles Curtis (Republican, Kansas) became his party's leader in the era before 1949, serving as majority leader from 1925 to 1929. Two reasons may account for the lack of stepping-stone potential in the whip's office during their early period. First, before 1949 both parties sometimes appointed an assistant leader, in addition to a whip, who potentially was next in the line of succession to the floor leader's post.[59] More important, however, was the nascent and nebulous state of the official party apparatus, making it unclear who would replace whom under what circumstances. The chairman of the conference of both parties, for example, was for many years the only officially designated party leader, and from this position, it has been concluded, emerged the office of the floor leader.[60]

Several reasons account for the failure of the five Democratic whips—Myers, Clements, Humphrey, Long, and Kennedy—and two Republican whips—Kuchel and Griffin—to become their party's leader in the period since 1949; Myers, Clements, and Kuchel were defeated for re-election: Humphrey left the Senate to become Vice President of the United States; Long was defeated by Kennedy for the whip's office; Kennedy was defeated by Robert Byrd of West Virginia; and Griffin lost to Senator Howard H. Baker, Jr., (Tennessee), in his 1977 bid for the top GOP post. Senator Saltonstall left his whip position to become Republican conference chairman in 1957.

Even though the whip, since 1949, has appeared to be next in line to succeed to the leadership of his party, it should be stressed that this is a matter of probability and not of certainty. No fixed or formalized system of party advancement can be discerned. Republican whip Leverett Saltonstall, for example, was bypassed for the leadership position in 1952 when Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio, the majority leader, appointed Senator William Knowland of California to be acting majority leader in his absence. Authoritative explanations of this selection are not available, although political observers of that time stated that many conservative Republican leaders opposed the elevation of a liberal, like Senator Saltonstall, to the majority leaders' position.[61] A more recent example would be the one-vote margin of victory in 1977 of Senator Baker over then Minority Whip Griffin, as noted above.

Among the benefits that accrue to a senator who becomes a whip are additional staff and office space, numerous invitations to social, diplomatic, and political functions, and increased public visibility because of mass media coverage. Two other benefits are particularly important—access to the President (especially when his party controls the White House) and full knowledge of all Senate activities. As Prof. David E. Truman observed:

> In a governmental system in which the executive bulks large and in which the influence structures that determine public policy are varied and shifting, information on the plans of the President and his staff is a major asset.[62]

A clear illustration of the access to information enjoyed by a whip is furnished by Senator Thomas Kuchel of California. He once stated:

> I was impressed during the consideration of the nuclear test ban treaty with the joint hearings which were conducted by members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senate Committee on Armed Services, and the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. As assistant Republical leader, I was invited to attend these sessions as were others in the leadership. I did attend them, and found the information developed there, by Senators who were experts in the work of the various committees and who had thus viewed the problems of nuclear energy and power from different perspectives, most helpful to me in arriving at my own decisions.[63]

Obviously, the more knowledgeable a party leader is, the more he may function as a source of information for his partisan colleagues and as adviser to them at their request.

Evidently some whips have thought the position gave them an advantage in the legislative process. Former majority whip Russell Long (Louisiana) wrote in his March 4, 1967, newsletter to his constituents that he was glad to be whip because it allowed him to do more for his state.[64] Similarly, Senator Alan Cranston said that his election as majority whip "will enhance my opportunities to be effective on behalf of California."[65] Senator Stevens also stated that he could do more for Alaska as assistant minority leader.[66]

Duties of Senate Whips

The duties of the whip are formally spelled out only in the Republican Conference rules. "The assistant floor leader shall assist in securing the attendance of members at party conferences and upon the floor of the Senate when their presence is considered necessary by the chairman or the floor leader, and shall perform such other duties as the chairman or floor leaders may require.[67] This description general as it is, underscores the chief duty of whips—that of assisting the party's floor leader.[68] In addition, the Republican whip is given responsibility of conducting, either directly or with the help of the minority secretary, a whip check to determine how Republicans will vote on a particular issue.[69]

It was once the chief duty of a whip to arrange pairs and know the whereabouts of Senate colleagues, but in recent years this task has been occasionally handled not by the whip's office, but by the floor leader's staff, or more often, by the secretaries to the majority and minority parties. For example, in 1949 Senator Ralph E. Flanders (Republican, Vermont) delivered a note to his party's whip, Kenneth S. Wherry, stating:

> Instead of arranging for a general pair as I told you on the floor, we have agreed to leave the pairing on specific questions up to Mark Trice (secretary to the minority) and his opposite number. I have left my instructions with him.[70]

Because of the absence of any official formulation, the whip's duties have been defined by precedent, with some variation developing from the different interpretations of the whip's role by those who have held the position as well as from the feelings and attitudes toward the whip's role held by whoever is majority (minority) leader. For example, Republican whip Thomas Kuchel stated that he learned the duties of his job from several sources: (1) The activities of previous party whips; (2) the writings of former Senator Hiram Johnson (California); (3) the advice given him by certain Senators; (4) suggestions offered by his party leader; and (5) his personal definition of what a whip should do.[71] In the case of Senator Robert Griffin, his conception of a whip's role developed from: (1) His previous service in the House, (2) his personal determination of what the whip's duties should be, such as preparation of a whip notice, and (3) the need he felt as a junior Senator to be more fully informed on what to expect in the way of Senate action.[72]

[68] As assistant to the floor leader the party whip has responsibilities in several areas, including: (1) The scheduling and management of legislation; (2) keeping his party advised about proposed action on legislation; (3) securing party unity to insure that the legislative program is carried out; (4) remaining informed about national and international problems and the status of bills in standing committees; (5) dealing with all procedural questions on the floor; and (6) offering various technical motions relative to the organization of the Senate at the beginning of each new Congress. Since 1941, for example, the majority party whip has announced the hour of meeting for the Senate. See Floyd M. Riddick, "Majority and Minority Leaders of the Senate," Senate Document 95–24 (Washington, D.S.: U.S. Government Printing Office. 1977).

Views concerning the work of a whip by several Senators who have held this post help to illuminate the assistant floor leader's task. The first Democratic whip, J. Hamilton Lewis (Illinois), wrote:

> The duties of the Senate whip demand his presence on the floor as constantly as possible. Sometimes the long hours test his physical capacity, but generally he is devoted to "watchful waiting." He is ex officio assistant floor leader, and in the absence of the floor leader, and other assistants, may be called upon to represent his party. At rollcalls he reports absentees and pairs which have been brought to his attention. He is not supposed to introduce bills lest they may divert his attention from his floor duties. While the parliamentary whip is not supposed to engage in debate, there is no such restriction on the congressional whips. In fact, as assistant floor leader it often becomes necessary for them to do so.[73]

The biographer of the Republican party whip from 1944 to 1949 wrote:

> Senator Kenneth S. Wherry saw himself as an official who was chosen by his party to assist in maintaining party discipline and united action in the day-to-day deliberations of the U.S. Senate. He viewed his position as being responsible for the attendance of party members and for the arranging and controlling of the "pairing" process. He reported the absentees, pairs, and voting attitudes of the members on rollcalls. He consulted with and worked under the party floor leader in arranging the order of business of the Senate; and he handled the details of the weekly and day-to-day legislative programs, consulting with the floor secretary of his own party and with the whip of the Democratic party.[74]

Senator Leverett Saltonstall, Republican whip from 1949 to 1957, stated that the whip's chief responsibility was to do the "dirty work" as assistant floor leader, i.e., being on the Senate floor or ensuring that, in the whip's absence, someone designated by him would be there to protect the party and national interest.[75]

In addition to his Senate leadership functions, a party whip sometimes acts as Senate spokesman for major White House policies when his party controls the presidency.[76] Senator J. Hamilton Lewis gave his view of the whip's relationship to the White House:

> I particularly desire to stress that it is not sufficient as a justification for our oppostion that we ourselves individually may feel that the President is wrong. The President of the United States, coming directly from the people has the right to be wrong. He may be wrong according to the estimate of some other man; he may be wrong according to the measure of some other community; but if he is fulfilling the directions of the people who placed him in office, at the same time giving him instructions as to the methods of relief they seek, however wrong it may appear to the individual here and there, that cannot be a justification for opposition to the measure.[77]

A Senate whip may support a particular measure because his leadership position "requires" him to support his President, particularly on matters involving national security. On occasion, however, party whips have taken positions opposed to those of their President, as witness the opposition of Minority Whip Robert Griffin (Republican, Michigan) to President Nixon's nomination of Clement F. Haynsworth to the Supreme Court. Former Minority Whip Griffin stated that on those issues where the policy position of the White House differred from his own, a Republican leader who supported Administration views defended them on the floor of the Senate.[78]

Finally, party whips have underscored their responsibility to make the Senate work as efficiently and effectively as possible. My most important responsibility, Majority Whip Alan Cranston said, "is to try to make the Senate work well, to make it strong and to preserve its independence." [79] In a similar vein, Minority Whip Ted Stevens stated his intention to seek improvements in the management of the Senate and to cooperate with the majority party in strengthening the Senate as an institution.[80]

FLOOR LEADER-WHIP RELATIONS

The relation between the floor leader and his assistant parallels, in some ways, that between the President and Vice President of the United States: Both the whip and Vice President depend to a great extent, though not completely of course, upon the directions and duties given them by their party's leader; both have ill-defined responsibilities; and, at times, whips and Vice Presidents have been selected more for political balance than for ideological compatibility.[81]

[81] It was reported, for example, that "the choice of Senator Humphrey for Democratic whip was intended to give the party's advanced liberal wing a greater voice in the leadership councils." See New York Times, December 2, 1960, 24.Geography, too, may play a role in the selection of party whips. In 1956 Senator George Smathers (Democrat-Florida) thought of seeking the whip position but stated that since a southerner, Lyndon Johnson of Texas, already held the floor leader's post, a geographic division in the leadership was desirable. See New York Times, Nov. 13, 1956, 1. For further discussion of the geographic aspects of whip selection see Rowland Evans and Robert Novak, "Lyndon B. Johnson: The Exercise of Power" (1966), 41-44.

Just as a Vice President can be more effective in national affairs if he is close, personally and/or ideologically, to the President, the whip can be more effective if he is close to the floor leader.

For example, even though Senator Leverett Saltonstall, Republican whip from 1949 to 1957, and Senator Kenneth S. Wherry, Republican minority leader from 1949 to 1951, represented respectively the liberal and conservative wings of their party, they enjoyed one another's confidence.[82] As a result, Senator Saltonstall played an active role in keeping his party advised about legislation under Wherry's leadership.[83] The relationship between Saltonstall and Wherry became particularly close when Wherry was taken ill and Saltonstall became acting minority leader from August 31, 1951, to Actober 20, 1951. Each night, Wherry's biographer reported, Senator Saltonstall conferred with Senator Wherry in his hospital room about Senate business.[84] On the other hand, when Senator William Knowland of California became minority leader in 1952 and Saltonstall remained as whip, the close relation that had marked the association between Saltonstall and Wherry ceased to exist. Senator Saltonstall has stated that Senator Knowland kept his own counsel about legislative business, preferring to direct his party without the assistance of his whip. Hence, the role of the Republican whip was of less importance during this period.

Senator Hugh Scott (Republican, Pennsylvania) and Robert Griffin, (Republican, Michigan), formerly minority leader and assistant floor leader, respectively, worked together closely on all phases of the legislative process, keeping each other fully informed about all occurrences that affected the Senate's business. Senator Scott believed that the "shared-leadership" approach was the best way to give direction to his party.[85] A collegial decisionmaking process employed to determine national and party priorities by all members of the Republican leadership. At all levels, as the Republican whip, Senator Griffin played a key role in that process.

For example, with Senator Scott's concurrence, Minority Whip Griffin assumed many leadership duties on the Republican side. At Senator Scott's request, Griffin worked closely with Senator Byrd, then Democratic whip, to facilitate the work of the Senate. Republican Whip Griffin was consulted on unanimous consent agreements, or their modifications; on clearing for floor action measures not previously scheduled; determining when votes shall occur; in obtaining special orders for other Senators to speak; and in many ways worked to insure that the whip's office was of service to all Republican Senators.[86]

The present GOP leadership of Minority Leader Howard Baker and Minority Whip Ted Stevens also enjoy a close working relationship. Each keeps the other informed about party and legislative developments, and decisions regarding Senate business are usually jointly made.[87]

A close personal relationship evidently existed between Senator Mike Mansfield (Democrat-Montana), and the former party whip, Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts. Senator Mansfield gave high praise to Senator Kennedy's performance as the Democratic whip and even recommended that Senator Kennedy refer to himself as the assistant majority leader, a title more descriptive of his duties.[88] With the knowledge and approval of Senator Mansfield, the former assistant majority leader expanded the conception and duties of his office in several ways: Senator Kennedy regularly conducted meetings with groups of Senators to discuss policy maters; he sponsored a seminar for freshman Senators to familiarize them with the legislative process; and he organized meetings with Senate staff personnel as a means to exchange ideas about legislative issues.[89] As Senator Mansfield concluded: "The relationship that a whip has with the leader is a close and cooperative one. This party leader does not influence the activities of the whip but works closely together with him and if we differ on specific issues, we go our separate ways insofar as the vote is concerned." [90]

On January 21, 1971, Senator Robert C. Byrd (West Virginia) was elected majority whip by his party colleagues, defeating Senator Edward Kennedy's re-election bid. Senator Byrd, as Secretary to the Democratic Conference from 1967 to 1971, the third ranking party leadership position, spent long hours on the Senate floor assisting Majority Leader Mansfield.[91] Senator Byrd's role as Secretary, plus his diligent and systematic study of Senate rules and precedents, have prepared him well in legislative procedure.

Because of this previous floor association, Mansfield and Byrd enjoyed a close professional relationship as majority leader and majority whip. Both consulted daily about party and legislative matters and worked together to schedule legislation for floor consideration. Senator Byrd stated:

> The job of the whip, as I view it, is to do the floor work, assist the majority leader, and promote Democratic policy as formulated by the majority leader and the Democratic Policy Committee.[92]

He further stated his duty is to be 100 percent loyal to the majority leader; if they disagreed on legislative issues, each voted his own convictions.[93] Senator Mansfield described their relations as "excellent." [94]

With Mansfield's approval, Senator Byrd expanded the functions of his office in at least two important ways. First, Senator Byrd distributed to all Democratic Senators a weekly whip notice (more frequently when necessary) that lists in detail (1) the measures to be discussed on each day, (2) whether rollcall votes will be taken on those measures, sometimes even specifying the exact hour when such votes will occur, (3) Senators who will speak at the beginning of a day's session for a time not to exceed 15 minutes or for a longer period following the end of legislative business, and (4) the measures that may be considered in the week(s) ahead (for an example of a 1979 Democratic whip notice, see below).

SENATE DEMOCRATIC WHIP NOTICE

TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 1979

DEAR COLLEAGUE:

Monday, April 23

Senate convenes: At press time the convening time had not been set. Following the usual preliminary activities, the Senate will begin its work on the First Concurrent Budget Resolution for fiscal year 1980.

Rollcalls: Senators should anticipate that there will likely be rollcall votes on Monday, but none will occur after circa 6–6:30 p.m.

A Look Ahead

After the First Concurrent Budget Resolution is disposed of, the Department of Education bill, S. 210, will be back up under the time agreement.

Other measures on the calendar ready for Senate consideration after the break include S. 429, fiscal year 1979 supplemental defense appropriations; S. 413, Aviation Safety and Noise Abatement Act; and S. 292, fiscal year 1980 authorization for special supplemental food program.

Additionally, the following items are among those expected to be reported from committee during the break and may be taken up any time thereafter:

Emergency Medical Services;
Nurse Training Act;
Health Planning Act;
Clinical Laboratory Regulation;
Alcohol Abuse Treatment Act;
Drug Abuse Treatment Act;
Magistrates Act;
National Science Foundation Authorization;
Small Business Employee Ownership Act; and Veterans Health Care Amendments of 1979.

The coming May 15 deadline for committee reports—the deadline which requires reporting of all new authorizing legislation for fiscal year 1980—means that many bills dealing with diverse subjects will be coming to the Senate calendar in the next few weeks. At least 65 of these extend programs which are due to expire September 30, and they will be among those measures given priority.

Also the 13 regular appropriations bills will be before the Senate in the coming months, and each one will be brought up as soon as possible after it is reported.

Under orders are two further measures which may also come before the Senate in due course: The first is the constitutional amendment providing for direct election of the President, Senate Joint Resolution 28. It is to be reported by May 1 and considered after June 1. The second is Senate Joint Resolution 3, Senator Harry F. Byrd, Jr., resolution expressing the sense of Congress that mutual defense treaties can only be terminated with approval of a majority of the Senate. It is to be reported by May 1.

The usual procedure was for Majority Whip Byrd to write a draft of a whip notice and consult with Senator Mansfield about it. After this initial consultation, Byrd incorporated Mansfield's suggestions, making whatever changes were needed, and then returned later for a final discussion with Mansfield about the legislative agenda.[95] This general procedure is similarly followed by Majority Leader Byrd and Majority Whip Cranston.

Senator Byrd also took steps to improve and maintain order and decorum and to facilitate floor procedure, with the approval, of course, of the majority leader and the minority leadership. Adopting several of the suggestions recommended in 1970 by an informal committee of four Senators—Alan Cranston (Democrat, California), William Saxbe (Republican, Ohio), Harold Hughes (Democrat, Iowa), and Richard Schweiker (Republican, Pennsylvania)—Senator Byrd proposed 10 ways to insure more orderly floor procedure: [96]

10 SUGGESTIONS TO SENATORS

1. Please do not seek unanimous consent for additional time beyond the 3 minutes allotted during morning business.

2. Speeches up to 15 minutes in length may be arranged for the first part of the day if leadership is notified during the previous day's session. The Senate will come in early to accommodate a Senator who wants to make such a speech. The Senate will come in early for colloquies of longer duration than 15 minutes if the leadership is notified during previous day's session. Please contact the leadership on the floor or have your staff call extension 53735 for an allocation of time. Please keep length of speeches and colloquies within the time requested by you.

3. Speeches of more than 15 minutes duration should be made toward the afternoon.

4. Please observe the Pastore Rule concerning germaneness. It runs for 3 hours following "the conclusion of the morning hour or after the unfinished business or pending business has first been laid before the Senate on any calendar day." (Rule VIII).

5. Please use your microphone. This will help the visitors in the galleries to better understand what is being said.

6. In debate, the rules prohibit addressing another Senator in the second person. He must be addressed in the third person.

7. No Senator shall introduce to or bring to the attention of the Senate during its sessions any occupant in the Senate galleries. (rule XIX).

8. When presiding, remember that it shall be the "duty of the chair to enforce order on his own initiative and without any point of order being made by a Senator." (rule XIX).

9. Clerks to Senators are allowed the privilege of the floor only "when in the actual discharge of their official duties." (rule XXXIII) A special gallery is set aside to accommodate Senators' staff members.

10. Twenty minutes is the maximum allotted for a yea and nay vote. A warning bell will ring at the end of 15 minutes to indicate that the vote will be announced 5 minutes hence. (The time limitation on rollcalls was changed to 15 minutes for the 92d Cong., 2d sess.)

These points, with the concurrence of the joint leadership, are still energetically enforced by Majority Whip Cranston.

With the approval of Senator Mansfield, Senator Byrd made increasingly frequent use of unanimous consent agreements (1) to limit debate on bills, amendments, and amendments to amendments, (2) to determine who shall control the time for floor debate, (3) to waive Senate rules, (4) to authorize floor consideration of measures at certain periods in the day's proceedings, (5) to determine when votes shall occur, (6) to prohibit the introduction of nongermane amendments, (7) to schedule legislative measures for floor rebate, and (8) to modify unanimous consent agreements previously made. As an example, Majority Whip Byrd proposed the following unanimous consent agreement on June 28, 1972, which was agreed to:

> Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 8:30 a.m. tomorrow, and that following the recognition of the two leaders, the distinguished Senator from Missouri be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes; that he be followed by the junior Senator from West Virginia (Mr. Robert C. Byrd) for not to exceed 15 minutes; at the conclusion of which, and no later than 9 o'clock a.m., the distinguished Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cook) be recognized for not to exceed 45 minutes for the purpose of proposing certain amendments;
> That upon the disposition of the amendments by Mr. Cook, the distinguished Senator from Nebraska (Mr. Hruska) be recognized for not to exceed 2 hours for the purpose of proposing a motion.
> Provided further, that a vote then occur on the motion, without amendment thereto, to be proposed by Mr. Hruska;
> Provided that, should such motion prevail, there be a time limitation on the bill as reported back to the Senate of not to exceed 30 minutes, and that a vote then follow on the question of striking title IX;
> Provided, however, in the alternative that, if the motion by Mr. Hruska, should not prevail, the distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. Dominick) be recognized for not to exceed 20 minutes, to be equally divided, for the purpose of his calling up an amendment;
> Provided further, that a vote then occur on the adoption of the committee substitute as amended;

> Provided additionally, that debate on the final passage of the bill be limited to such time as may remain, but not to exceed the hour of 3:30 o'clock p.m., and that rule XII be waived;
> Ordered further, Mr. President, that the time in connection with each of the several motions or amendments be equally divided and controlled between the mover of such and the distinguished manager of the bill.[97]

Unanimous consent agreements have also been used to extend the period for germane debate (rule VIII of the Standing Rules provides for a 3-hour period during which debate must be germane to the pending business). During Senator Byrd's tenure as whip, the use of unanimous consent agreements increased, and they became more detailed and broader in scope. This pattern is also evident under Majority Leader Byrd and Majority Whip Cranston.

Senators Byrd and Mansfield, with the cooperation of the minority leadership, occasionally used what is referred to as a "two-track" legislative day. This means that on a given day a legislative proposal will be debated for several hours and then laid aside until the next day. Another proposal will then be debated for the remainder of the day. For example, on February 3, 1972, the Senate first debated the equal employment bill (S. 2515) and then put it aside and turned to the foreign aid appropriations bill (H.R. 12067) for the rest of the day. The next day, the Senate passed the foreign aid measure and then resumed consideration of S. 2515. For the next several days, until it was passed on February 22, 1972, the equal employment bill was the major business before the Senate, although other measures were debated. As an example, on February 15 the Senate first considered a treaty prohibiting the emplacement of nuclear weapons on the seabed and then return to its debate on equal employment. The track system is employed by Majority Leader Byrd and Majority Whip Cranston, with the concurrence of Minority Leader Baker and Minority Whip Stevens, to expedite the Senate's business.

Senator Cranston will doubtlessly be of great assistance to Majority Leader Byrd. Many of the tasks associated with the whip's office, particularly learning in advance the voting intentions of Senators, were performed by Senator Cranston prior to his election to the No. 2 Democratic position. Known as a master of parliamentary procedure and prodigious worker, Majority Whip Cranston has earned a reputation as a premier gatherer of votes on many public policies. "He lines up 25 to 30 percent of the votes on most legislation," said a Democratic colleague of Senator Cranston.[98] "The best nose-counter in the Senate [Majority Whip Cranston], is absolutely superb when it comes to knowing how the votes will fall in place on a given issue," states Majority Leader Byrd.[99] Majority Whip Cranston determines where the votes are on issues by surveying Democratic and Republican Senators.

Majority Whip Cranston has also been very helpful to new Senators by assisting them in understanding Senate procedures and in lining up votes for their legislation. These special talents of Senator Cranston were factors in his election to the whip post, and have produced the "close working relationship with Senator Byrd" that the majority whip foresaw in 1977.[1]

A floor leader's conception of his role can also do much to influence the activities of the whip. Lyndon B. Johnson actively pursued the leadership of his party in the Senate.[2] As a result, when Senator Johnson became his party's leader he held the levers of power in his own hands while his whip, Senator Mike Mansfield, functioned more as an agent of coordination and persuasion, and less as a codirector of legislative activities. As Prof. Ralph Huitt pointed out: "Johnson sometimes approached those Senators he was not 'easy' with through the Democratic whip, Senator Mike Mansfield, or the secretary of the majority, Robert G. Baker."[3]

Following Senator Johnson's heart attack in 1955, however, much of the workload of Senate management was handled by Senator Clements and Senator Mansfield. It was then reported that Mansfield "is coming to be acknowledged as the major foreign policy spokesman among younger Democrats, and he is moving into a position of active partnership with the Senate Majority Leader, Lyndon Baines Johnson."[4] How a floor leader utilizes his whip varies for reasons of personality, circumstances, or ideology, although without personal rapport with the party leader the role of the whip can be no more than an honorary title without substance.

CONCLUSIONS

Several conclusions emerge from this study. First, unlike the rise to power of committee chairmen, and even to a degree the assignment of senators to committees, election to the office of party whip—or for that matter of floor leaders—does not rest on the custom of seniority but on other factors. Some of the most important of these are: (1) selection by the party leader, e.g., Senator Lyndon Johnson's choice of Senator Mike Mansfield to become his assistant in 1957;[5] (2) the need for ideological balance in the leadership, e.g., Senator Saltonstall's selection as minority whip in 1949 as a leadership spokesman for liberal elements in the party;[6] (3) some White House support, e.g., President John Kennedy's support of Senator Hubert Humphrey for majority whip in 1961;[7] (4) qualities such as legislative skill, persuasiveness, energy, youth, and political instinct, which enabled Senator Lyndon Johnson to become whip after only 2 years in the Senate;[8] (5) a reputation earned in previous Congresses for dynamic leadership as in the case of Senators Robert Griffin and Ted Stevens; (6) recognized competency in legislative procedure, organizational ability, energy, political instinct, and previous service in a party post, as in

Senator Robert C. Byrd's case; and (7) respect among colleagues as a member who does his homework, and who is a skilled parliamentarian and vote-counter, as in Senator Alan Cranston's case.

Second, the office of whip has expanded in function in both parties since its creation in the early 1900's. When first established, party whips were mainly responsible for insuring party attendance, a duty now performed chiefly by the secretaries to each party, and, according to the first whip, were even expected to refrain from introducing legislation. Now, however, the whip's duties have been broadened to include his role as assistant to his party leader, the range of activities performed by that office under Senators Robert C. Byrd and Alan Cranston and management of the new Republican assistant whip system by Senator Ted Stevens.

A third conclusion is that the party leader is decisive in determining the activities of his whip. Ideological differences between them do have an effect on the whip's role and can prevent a whip's advancement to the leadership position.

During the postwar years, the position of whip in both parties has gained considerable importance. Not only has the whip become a leader in his own right; he is also often the heir apparent to his party's leadership.
